ADVANCED STUDY IN RUSSIAN AND SOVIET HISTORY

History N-445/3 Section A

Description:

This course deals with specific problems in Tsarist and Soviet Russia. In the Pre-Revolutionary period attention will be focussed on the development of serfdom, the emancipation of the peasantry and the nature of the 19th century agrarian crisis. An analysis of Tsarist attempts to industrialize the country will be followed by a survey of revolutionary parties and the solutions they offered to solve Russia's problems. In the Soviet period emphasis will be placed on a discussion of the Revolution of 1917, the problems of economic growth and the changing structure of Soviet society. Lastly, an attempt will be made to examine: 1) the problem of change and continuity in Russian life, and 2) the relevance of the Soviet experience in the modern world.

Assignments:

Each class meeting will consist of a short formal lecture. The remaining period will be devoted to a seminar discussion of specific problems and readings. Students will be judged on the basis of their contributions to the seminar and will also have an option of submitting a series of short papers (8) or of two longer research papers.

Texts:

Reading lists will contain a series of paperbacks that all students are expected to acquire. In addition a number of books and articles will be held on library reserve.

Instructor: I.H. Smith
